

better than allow any obstacle to interfere with the design. But very few Americans would like to conquer Canada. In the first place, they do not like killing white men who speak English merely for aggression and for the second, they do not like the loss of their possessions. Six new States full of men exactly like themselves, with votes and all the rest of it, who would ally themselves with the South or with the West, or with the Pacific states, would be a serious blow to the cause of secession, would not suit them at all. They desire their white people to be loyal, and are quite aware that however even to the South they are not. They know that they are bound with some authority by states and communities which are within their own borders, which speak their language, and which are not separated from them by mountains or rivers.

The have learned to know that the hostility of a "secession" of the Republic is inconvenient, and would rather not be opposed by both their border regions at once. Then they called for war, or rather, for a war to be declared. Order affirmed with costs.
